Dynamic Airways gets FAA jet approval

Dynamic Airways LLC said Thursday that it has gained Federal Aviation Administration approval to add a second Boeing MD-88 jet to its air carrier certification.

Dynamic, based in Smith Reynolds Airport in Winston-Salem, began charter-airline service in November.

The company said that the second jet will be based out of the country to support a long-term contract with a new international customer.

The company is owned by Dynamic Aviation of Bridgewater, Va., which has nearly 500 employees in five sectors: intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance; airborne-data information; fire management; aerial dispersant spraying for agricultural and other needs; and the release of sterile insects for crop and livestock purposes.

Among Dynamic Aviation's customers are national defense, military intelligence and federal agencies; state and local governments; and private companies.

Dynamic Airways began with 40 employees in Winston-Salem, including a small number of former employees of defunct Pace Airlines Inc. Guy Cannady, its chief operating officer, said that the company expects to add 10 to 15 local employees for every charter aircraft it brings into service.

"We look forward to adding more aircraft to our fleet before the end of the year, as our operations continue to expand," Cannady said.
